CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Campaign finance laws regulate the amounts and sources of money given or received for political purposes and stipulate disclosure requirements for political contributions and expenditures. In Texas, campaign finance requirements govern how much money candidates may receive from individuals and organizations, how much and how often they must report those contributions, and how much individuals, organizations and political parties may contribute to campaigns.

Texas Election Code Title 15 covers the regulation of political funds and campaigns including recordkeeping, reporting, and public posting of campaign and financial reports for County officeholders and candidates for office.
